

Masterplanning - keeping it real!

Presented by Stephen Tucker, Director of Urban Design and Regeneration (Scotland), Turley Associates.

Date 24 June 2009
Time 10 – 12:30 (followed by buffet lunch)
Location The Teacher Building, Glasgow
Audience Those with an interest in finding out more about the role of effective masterplanning in delivering successful mixed and sustainable communities.

Workshop description

Masterplanning can help raise the general standards of urban design and help create quality places. Done well, it can promote sustainability in its widest sense and deliver places where people want to live. But are we making the most of its potential? Are masterplans as effective as they could be and what does a masterplan need to address?

Stephen will share his knowledge of masterplanning across the UK and beyond, consider the key attributes that effective masterplans possess and discuss the challenges involved in delivering mixed and sustainable communities, especially in the current economic climate.

Next steps

The Learning Network will facilitate more detailed follow up action learning sets for those who have a particular interest. Follow up actions can concentrate on particular topics or aspects of masterplanning approaches. We will also ensure that we capture the key learning points from the day and share these with learning network members who are unable to get along.
